Kansas Association for School Psychologists

DATE: March 5, 1979

TO: Honorable Elwain F. Pomeroy, Chairman, and members of the Senate Judiciary Committee

SUBJECT: Further comments and clarifications regarding Senate Bill No. 379 which would require courts to refer juvenile first-offenders to local boards of education to be considered for special educational assessment and services.

At the Tuesday, February 27 hearing for Senate Bill No. 379 there was some discussion and disagreement as to the intent and rationale of the bill.

Last week I further researched the background of the bill and spoke with Mr. Anderson, Chairman of the Governor's Task Force on the Problems of Youth. I also spoke with Mr. Warren Bell, Director of State and Federal Programs for the State Department of Education, and the Commissioner's delegate to the Task Force. Both of these gentlemen indicated that the Task Force recommended that legislation be enacted which would require the courts to refer juvenile first-offenders to their home school districts to be considered for special educational assessment and services. The rationale which they expressed was that many of the children who come to the attention of the courts have unidentified and thus untreated learning problems. It is clear, then, that the testimony which KASP presented before your committee was based on an accurate interpretation of the intent and rationale for Senate Bill No. 379.

The following documents should be helpful in this matter;

1. Report entitled Governor's Task Force - Problems of Youth Under SECTION I: INVESTING IN PREVENTION, see Recommendation #9, page 24, which states:

"The Task Force recommends legislation to require courts to refer all youth who are first-time court referrals to schools to be considered for special-educational assessment and services. . . Requiring this referral procedure allows the school to examine a youth's records, to consider the youth for educational screening and to provide educational services if it is warranted."

2. Governor's Special Message on Children and Youth to the Kansas Legislature. (see House and Senate Journals for February 7, 1979) Under the heading "EVALUATION OF PROBLEM YOUTH" the Governor's message states:

"Many problem youth are seen many times by the court before they are removed from the home. However, they seldom receive an educational or psychological evaluation prior to an out of home placement. Thus, I am proposing two measures that will result in early evaluation.

1. Require an Educational Assessment by the School for Youth Coming Into Contact with the Court for the First Time.

This requirement will result in the court having better information on the child's needs and will result in the child's problems being brought to the attention of the school. In some cases, a change in a child's educational program may prevent future problems."
