Dear Chairman Rahjes and Representatives of the Agriculture and Natural Resources Committee.

Once upon a time, conservation meant focusing on bringing back the wildlife that had been hunted almost to extinction following the year of no summer in 1816. The famine years were a result of volcanic winters that caused freezing temperatures in every month of the growing season. This era of relying on animals for sustenance continued on into the 1940s as the United States suffered through Boom to Bust economies with monetary collapses in the 1890s and 1930s. Those conservation efforts were a success.

Conservation efforts began to run afoul as soon as Roosevelt's New Deal broke the first manmade lake and planted the first shelter belt. A new non-native ecosystem began to form in Kansas as a stronger economy inspired families to pursue wilderness vacations.

By the 1960s and 70s, the hippie movements took over conservation. Non-profits were created to covet private property for building a Kansas landscape of no human occupation.

Now, in 2025, that coveting of private property has evolved into a new definition of conservation. Today, conservation means "Farmers are too stupid to farm without a group of people from the city to tell them how."

Everything about modern-day conservation programs is abhorrently offensive.

Please help us stop the arrogant assumption that experienced land managers need supervision from elitists in the city. Please kill this bill.

Sincerely,

Angel Cushing
